- My project is a wiki repository where we use astrology as a reflective and generative platform for scattered, participative research around mundane concerns.

As a collective archiving of the practice, this work will be interpreted, mapped out, explored, and organised, through the symbolic meaning of the 'planets' as a point of reverence.

The thesis is a handbook, or practical treatise for the practice developed on the wiki : It reveals the deep motivation behind the project and the technical applicabilities of the practice.

CORRUPTION CONTROL CONSULTANTS

TYPES OF CORRUPTION

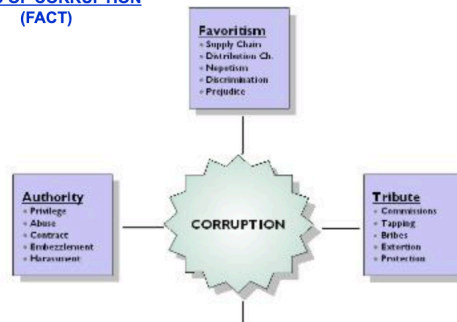

Corruption is increasingly associated with bribery, which is arguably the most prevalent and costly practice. As a result, most anti-corruption efforts focus on checklists to prevent active (giving) and to a much lesser extent, passive (receiving) bribery.

In reality, there are many different types of corrupt practices, all of which fit the classical definition of misuse of resources for personal gain, and each of which requires different solutions.

Several approaches have been used to classify and distinguish among these different types of corruption, and group them in attempts to find common solutions:

- 1) FACT (corrupt practices by Favoritism, Authority, Competence and Tribute).
- 2) 4 P's (Preference, Power, Privilege and Payment).
- 3) MAPP (Money, Assets, People and Power)

It's available here on Astro-Seek - Annual Circular Graphic Ephemeris

But I'm using additional script to extract this graphic movement for every single day/date from January 1, 2021 to December 31, 2021 as separate screenshots (and then I merge them into animation) ... and this option is not available to public.

"The ironie of nomomancy is that between Gaïa and Gafa, there is only one simple letter, just like between truth (emeth), and death (meth) in the myth of Golem. This letter, that has to replace the technoïd outrageousness and cross out social media's mogul. It's a sharp vowel, sparkling and diacritical.

This is an i to which the dual points prime already for the constellations to inhabit.

Some people, when you show them the Great Bear, all they see is a trolley.

The ï of Gaïa (fait clin deuil) recalls the intelligence of friendship, that brings forth true politics of commons. It is the intelligence of the collective, that doesn't need anymore servers, just bodies and just minds.

This " is also, of course, the ï of noble imaginaries, multiple and pluriversal. It's the ï of magineers and magicians, who are preparing, we hope so, the culture of the living that we will need so that Gaïa flourishes, with and through us.

Let's call it ïmaginariës, as an accomplice sign of ralliement."¹

Tfw when colonization fails 😂 relation to each other. Of course, he still assumed that the sun was Earth, but his measurements represented an important step forward in the study of this relationship. He also developed an instrument that applied spherical trigonometry to astronomical problems.

Farghani, from the Ferghana Valley in present-day Uzbekistan, wrote a treatise on the main astronomical instrument of the Middle Ages, the astrolabe, that later gained a wide readership in Europe. He also penned a study on astronomy that became the best-known "Arab" work in that field in Europe. Among his many readers was Christopher Columbus, who, working half a millennium after Farghani, seized on the Central Asian's calculation of a degree of Earth's circumference as $56 \frac{2}{3}$ miles. Farghani's calculation was in Arab miles, however, while Columbus, eager to reduce the distance between Europe and China to the greatest extent possible, jumped to the conclusion that he had meant Roman miles. This, along with several other computational errors, reduced the distance Columbus would have to travel by 25 percent. Because of this miscalculation, the "Admiral of the Ocean Sea" fully expected to find "Cipango," or Japan, at about the same meridian as the Virgin Islands. The shorter measurement was woefully inaccurate, but it conveniently provided Columbus with a powerful argument when he began to present his case for funding to the king of Portugal, and later to the Spanish court.⁸

Several Central Asians prepared astronomical tables of stunning accuracy. Ulughbeg, a ruler in Samarkand who pursued a lifelong passion for astronomy, determined the length of the sidereal year more accurately than Copernicus and measured Earth's axial tilt so precisely that his figure is still accepted today. A student of Ulughbeg's, Ali Kushji, considered that the motion of comets provided empirical evidence for the possibility of Earth's rotation and was the first to declare astronomy's full independence from "natural philosophy."

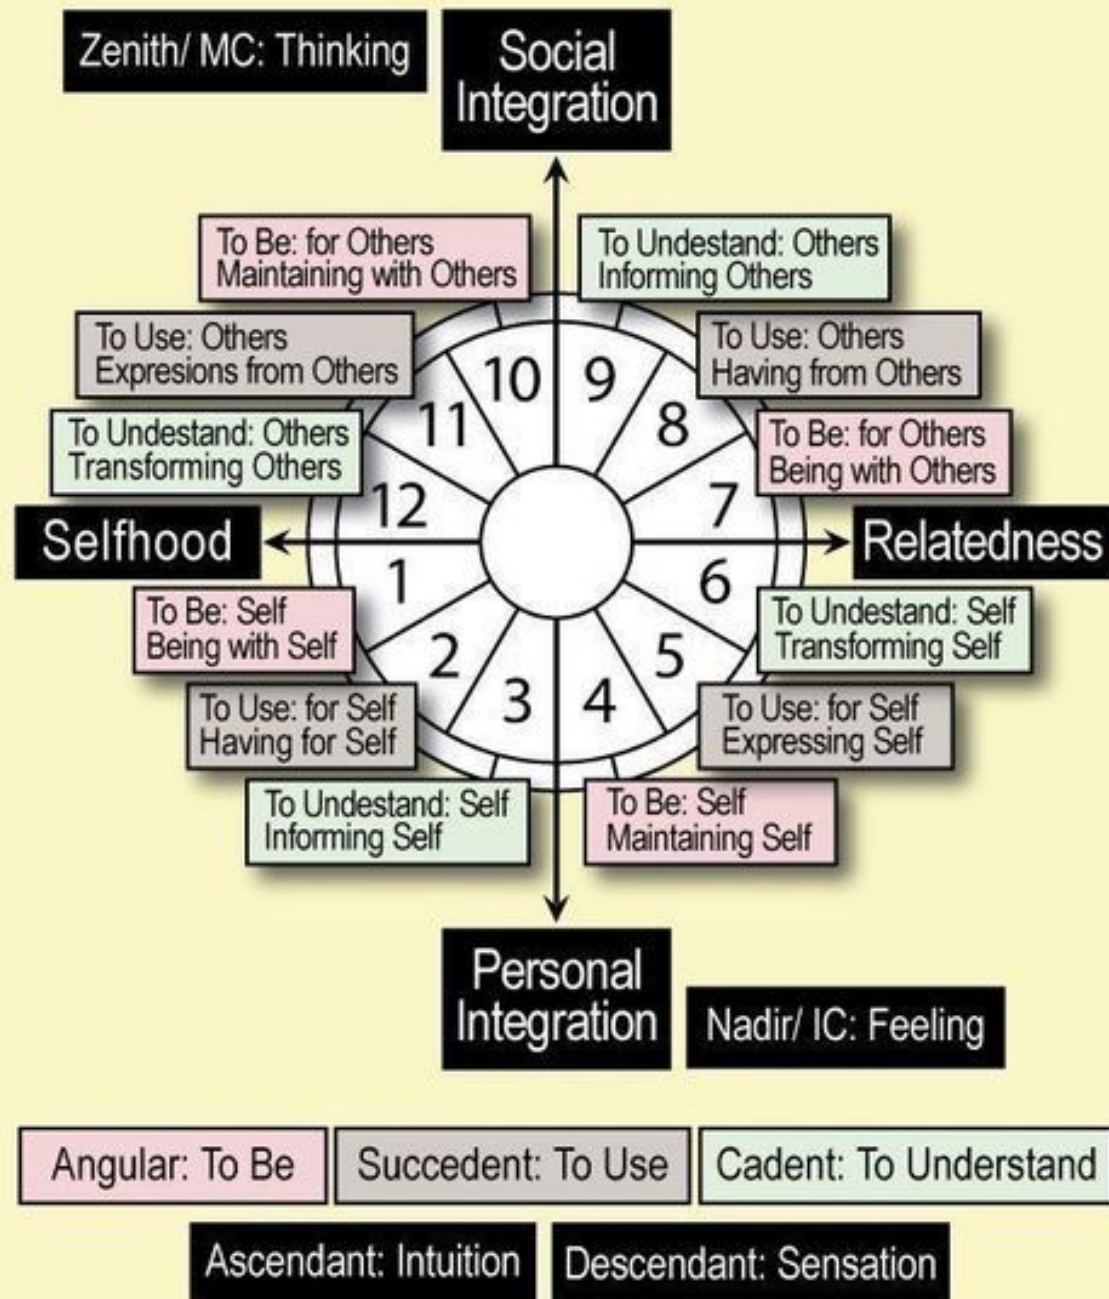

In mathematics, Khwarazmi was the first to elaborate a theory of equations solvable through radicals, which can be applied to the solution of a variety of arithmetical and geometrical problems. The result was a book, Algebra, that gave its name to the field; the term algorithm is a corrupted form of his own name. Khwarazmi advanced the field of spherical astronomy and did more than anyone else to popularize the subject.

Ask me anything about Postcolonial Astrology!

can you share your inspiration behind this framework? ps - preordered & sooo excited

thank you!!

the inspiration came from frustration. frustration that western archetypes are seen to be universal. it also came from inspiration. at the ways that these archetypes are taken and misused to create all kinds of meaning and relationships by oppressed people.

Another reason I'm asking this is because I remember I was doing some library research and saw a secondary source say that the meanings of the houses were not standardized until William Lilly's time. I was very surprised when a lot of sources said house meanings come before 0 AD.

Alice Sparkly Kat Astrology⁷ @alicesparklykat · Feb 19

Does anyone have sources for why it's often cited that the houses originated in Egyptian astrology?

I know Egypt localized the horoscope with the ascendent but didn't those turn into the signs? The only PDF I found from Project Hindsight says that the meanings are Medieval.

The reason why this is important is because this would mean the houses weren't standardized until colonialism.
